

Medical Schools Accepting International Student Applications

It is extremely difficult for international applicants who are not citizens or permanent residents of the United States to gain admission to American medical schools.

State-supported medical schools rarely consider international applicants for admission, and those private schools that do accept international applications generally require that international students place in escrow the equivalent of one to four years tuition and fees (U.S. $40,000 - $200,000). Unlike undergraduate education there are virtually no scholarships available for medical school, and in order to qualify for U.S. government-sponsored loans the applicant must be a citizen or permanent resident of the United States. Thus, international applicants who are considering a career as a medical doctor and hoping to receive their education at an American medical school should think carefully before applying for admission to an undergraduate program in the United States.

The following is a list of the U.S. medical schools that do accept applications from international students. Each school has different provisions, especially in regards to the number of years' worth of tuition and fees that they require an applicant to have in an escrow account, so it is important to refer to each school's individual policy.
