

THE YALE JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Many of the social arrangements we think of as quintessentially domestic . . . are inextricably interwoven with complex processes in other countries and regions of the globe. Consider: our security system; our political-economic system; the search to find and retain external markets for our products; our dependence on the natural resources without which an advanced industrial and science-based civilization cannot survive; our health system; our conceptions of fundamental morality Even “domestic law” courses can no longer be understood adequately—whether for descriptive or practical professional purposes—without an understanding of the organization and dynamics of the international system.

—W. Michael Reisman

The Yale Journal of International Law, now in its thirty-fourth year, is a primary forum for the discussion and analysis of contemporary international legal problems. Published twice a year at the Yale Law School, YJIL contains articles, comments, and book reviews written by top international scholars, practitioners, policymakers, and students.

Recent issues have contained discussions of a wide array of international legal, political, social, and economic issues, including: the application of negotiation theory to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict; legal aspects of the genetically modified food wars; the tension between human rights law and private law harmonization; plea bargaining at the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia; the Proliferation Security Initiative; and nation-building in the Middle East.

Our authors have included José E. Alvarez, Lea Brilmayer, Vahakn N. Dadrian, Owen Fiss, Harold Hongju Koh, David Luban, W. Michael Reisman, Peter Schuck, Gregory Shaffer, Theodore Sorensen, and William H. Taft, IV. Don't miss important discussions of crucial global issues—subscribe to The Yale Journal of International Law today.

THE YALE JOURNAL OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Yale Law School
P.O. Box 208215
New Haven, CT 06520-8215

Please enter my one-year subscription to The Yale Journal of International Law.

Name

Address

City

State

Zip

Country

$30.00 for one year (domestic)

$40.00 for one year (foreign)

Order must be accompanied by payment.

Checks should be made payable to The Yale Journal of International Law, Inc.